Firestone Management Group has published a report offering a detailed analysis of the private aviation sector in China.

"Never before has actual data been released beyond rough estimates," said Justin Lee Firestone, Managing Director of Firestone Management Group. "The global private jet community now has a current snapshot of the total number of private jets actually registered in Greater China today."

"This is significant because it allows our industry an opportunity to conduct targeted analysis of the constantly changing dynamics and competitive landscape of the emerging market of Greater China."

As of January 15, there are a combined total of 116 private jets registered in China, including Hong Kong and Macau.

Gulfstream leads the way with 43 registered aircraft, representing 37 percent of the entire installed base. The company is followed by Cessna, then Bombardier, Hawker Beechcraft, Dassault Falcon, Airbus and Boeing. Embraer currently has no private jets on Chinese registries.

Of the combined total of 116 aircraft, there are 86 aircraft that were manufactured less than 10 years ago (nearly 75 percent) including Hong Kong and Macau. These figures do not include private jets currently operating on foreign aircraft registrations within China, Hong Kong and Macau.

This is the first of what will become a bi-annual release from the Firestone Management Group.
